SYNOPSIS

This is a programme which reviews the economics and politics blocks of the Foundation Course. It also introduces some of the Philosophical issues which arise in the Social Sciences. In particular it looks at the use of a Model as a way of characterising an economic system and goes on to examine how specific or how general such a Model can be. The programme then goes on to examine the selection of concepts in arriving at explanations and ends by looking at the part values play in establishing theories.

PRESENTATION ANNOUNCEMENT

Now we come to a programme for the Social Science Foundation Course. Will students please note that we are unable to show the new programme planned for this year. Instead we are showing the one entitled "Questioning Theories", which introduces some of the philosophical issues which arise from 'Economics' and 'Class Structure' blocks of the Course.

Although the programme is not completely up-to-date this does not affect the main issues discussed.
