Description: Jocelyn Bell Burnell describes setting up the astrophysics research group at The Open University.

“...while I was at the Open University, certainly within the astronomy courses, which is the one I, the ones I was most involved with, we had some very good researchers. I managed to build up a very good astrophysics group while I was there, got to be about twenty or thirty people, all up, and included some really good lecturers who were both very good researchers and very good teachers. So the astronomy astrophysics stuff was absolutely superb.”
