Wynne Brindle:

Well that was to have been the end of the programme but as a postscript let's listen to something the Prime Minister said on the day he announced his resignation. It was in answer to a question put to him by David Holmes, the BBC's Political Editor, who asked Mr. Wilson which of his achievements he rated highest.

Harold Wilson:

Well there are some, away from the kind of question I've been answering, for example to have created The Open University which I, was my own devising and which I saw through, and I think this will be remembered when many other of the arguments of today have been forgotten.
